GRIP STRENGTH

>WU11a>

Now we will perform the last exercise. We will use a device called dynamometer to test the grip strength. To begin the exercise, choose the arm that you think is stronger. If you have had surgery on that arm in the last three months or suffer from arthritis in the hand or wrist you should not do this exercise. Now, put the arm on the table and the palm of the hand facing up. Hold the two pieces together like this (showing the dynamometer) and tell me if I should adjust the device. When I say "squeeze", do it as hard as possible. The two pieces will not move but I will read your grip strength. This will be done twice. If you feel any pain or discomfort, let me know and we will stop.

>WU11b>

INSTRUCTIONS FOR THE INTERVIEWER:

1. Explain to the person that we will use a device called dynamometer to test his/her strength using his/her stronger hand. If the person has had an operation of the arm or the hand in the last three months or suffers from arthritis in the hand or wrist, write it down and skip the exercise.
2. Demonstrate how to use the dynamometer, placing the arm on the table, palms up and squeezing.
3. Adjust the grip to the size of the person's hand and take note of the grip used.
4. Let him/her try the dynamometer but only once, since he/she will lose strength if done repeatedly.
5. Write down any observations that might interfere with the routine as described.
6. Say the measurement result out loud so it can be recorded and write down the results, rounding them to a half kilogram.
7. If the person has suffered no pain in the first measurement, continue to the second measurement using the same hand of the first one.
